

A snapshot of food insecurity in Hamilton

Over the past 30 years, Hamilton Food Share has been the city’s emergency food shipping and receiving hub for the network of 23 hunger relief programs it supports. Over the past two years, we have expanded our operations and our reach, providing food resources to 16 hunger relief organizations, and operating 23 emergency food programs. Our food acquisition and distribution program sees over 4.3 million pounds of nutritionally rich food, valued at almost 14 million dollars, distributed to food banks and hot meal programs operating across the city of Hamilton. Hamilton Food Share also manages the client intake database utilized by the network of agencies to collect data directly from frontline hunger programs. This report is formulated using that data.

Hunger and homelessness: The risk continues to grow.

Hamilton continues to have the 2nd highest per capita food bank access in the province, and the number of visits is continuing to increase. Each month in Hamilton, 4,220 people who access food banks are at a level of extreme risk of homelessness. This is an increase of 35% from last year. In a survey completed by Hamilton Food Share of households who access food banks, 62% of the respondents indicated they are able to pay rent each month because of the support received through emergency food banks. When asked, “Would you be at risk of losing your housing if you needed to purchase the food received from the food bank?” almost half (46%) of respondents indicated they would be at risk of losing their housing.

Seniors Going Hungry

‘Despite growing research and implementation of diverse income-based policy measures, food insecurity among elderly people remains a major policy issue in Canada². This is the reality faced by too many seniors in Hamilton. Throughout the past two years, visits made by seniors to emergency food bank programs increased by an alarming 34%, an increase of more than five times the increase we saw in adults as a whole. ‘Senior citizens are nearly twice as likely to access a food bank compared to adults under 65 years of age³.

up at a food bank

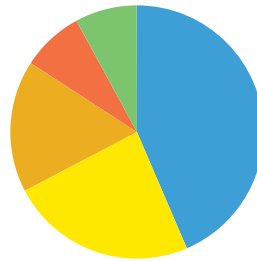

Households with children continue to struggle

Children continue to represent 40% of food bank visits. Over the past year, there was an increase of over 21% in the number of visits made by households with children residing in them. While some measures have been put in place to reduce the number of children impacted by food insecurity, such as the Canada Child Benefit, a recent study completed by McMaster University showed that households who access Emergency Food Banks who are also receiving CCB still fall far below the Low-Income Measure (between 26-43% below, depending on income source)⁴.
